George D. Prentiss pronounces the following a "perfect poem." It is from the pen of WILLIAM WALLACE HANLEY, associate editor of the Louisville Democrat, and son of the principal editor of that paper:

THE STAR.
On the road, the lonely road,
Under the cold pale moon,
Under the rugged tree beside;
He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.

There was a step that with his own,
A figure that stooped and bowed—
A cold white blade that gleamed and shone—
Like a polished sword, and a gleaming crown,
And the moon went behind a cloud!

But the moon came out in broad and gold;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—
Whistled a foolish tune.
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load;
The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—

The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—

The lone foot and the weary load.

He whistled and shifted his weary load—

The lone foot and the weary load.

For the Daily Patriot.

THE CRISIS—What ought Tennessee to do?

MESSRS. EDITORS:—As there seems to be a call for an expression of feeling and opinion in regard to the secession movement in the Southern States, it is right that every phase of opinion should be represented in the public prints. Not having seen fairly and squarely expressed the feelings and opinions of that portion of the people with whom I am connected, I am constantly employed among the real people in a rural locality, and think I know their views hereabout. Many of us think we can see our own interests, and as we are not in the cotton States, we will, "when necessary," do as much in defense of those rights as any will dare to do. But we are unwilling to resign our rights as citizens of the United States, and we will, "when necessary," do as much in defense of those rights as any will dare to do.

There can be no justice in a moiety of the people of any State being coerced into any measures which will increase the burden of taxation, and make a call upon their mental and physical resources, in aid of a cause which does not meet the approval of their judgment and conscience, and which, if pursued to consummation, must result in damaging their interests of every sort, material, political and religious. In the event that no overt act is committed by the General Government, whereby the constitutional rights of the people are infringed, I honestly believe that a large and respectable body of our citizens do not feel, and will continue to feel, that war against the Federal Authorities would be unwise and treasonable. I cannot see how any rational man, (and I am far from being alone in this opinion), by any principle of ethics, can argue himself into the belief that negroes justify the following of the evil example of another class in breaking through the political compact. No man can set of men, no State or Confederacy of States, has a right to coerce even a minority either by arms or the force of public opinion into the commission of that greatest of public crimes, treason. In the event of civil war a revolutionary party may compel those who do not side with them to occupy the position of non-combatants. But it is not in the power of any State of this Union, as a matter of right, to compel its citizens to take up arms against the United States. So that ultra Southern gentlemen, who have been hiding behind the doctrine of State sovereignty, in their revolutionary enterprises, had better examine into the validity of their doctrine before they attempt to force people into their arms, proposed to be raised for the purpose of resisting the Federal Government.

There can be no wisdom in the calling of conventions or the assembling of legislatures for the raising of State armies. Non-action on our part, will speak our disapproval of the seceding States in non-sentimental terms, and address resolutions. If those States are in the wrong, they deserve our sympathy. If in the spirit of recklessnes, under the specious plea of preserving the equality of the States, they show a disregard for the rights of other States, they deserve our unqualified disapprobation. State conventions will necessarily be called upon to a considerable extent of mid-air action, and will speak our disapproval of the seceding States in non-sentimental terms, and address resolutions. If those States are in the wrong, they deserve our sympathy. If in the spirit of recklessnes, under the specious plea of preserving the equality of the States, they show a disregard for the rights of other States, they deserve our unqualified disapprobation.

Our legislatures elected prior to the occurrence of the present exigencies and under the sway of party drill, cannot reflect the sentiment of public sentiment. The calling of State armies, if by drafting and arming the people, will be a great calamity. If such armies are made of volunteers, they would be subject to the objection, that they would contain too many non-headed men, who are everywhere, and on all occasions, and might create a cause for precipitating the now conservative States into revolution. The people of Tennessee should keep cool, remain quiet, and do nothing that would be calculated to bring about a civil war. The people of Tennessee should keep cool, remain quiet, and do nothing that would be calculated to bring about a civil war.
